

With the popularity of cellphones becoming a home phone as well ... I believe that is a dangerous thing to allow telemarketers to call. People may or may not answer their phone while driving. However, those who do ... or just being called while driving ... run the risk of distracting the driver. This is just one instance of how phone numbers are a private part of a person's identity and should only be used when it is explicitly given out ... not bought off of a list.
